

THOMAS RUSS

Thomas Russ, a specialist in hip-hop, musical theater, jazz funk, and tap, began dancing at the age of eight. Thomas continued dancing through college as a member of the Georgia Tech Goldrush Dance Team, notably winning a national championship in the D1A Hip Hop category at the National Dance Alliance competition. His performance credits include the Super Bowl LIII halftime show—headlined by Adam Levine and Maroon 5, with appearances by Travis Scott and Big Boi of OutKast—as well as performances with the Banana Ball baseball teams, Lil Baby, World of Dance, the Dance Worlds, international artists, professional ballet companies, and more. Thomas currently resides and teaches in Northern Virginia, while also traveling nationwide to teach and choreograph at various studios, instruct at conventions, and serve as an emcee and judge at dance competitions. Through his personal dance label, DangeRuss Choreo, LLC, Thomas has choreographed numerous award-winning routines, earning multiple entertainment and choreography accolades, regional titles, and national championships. Thomas is passionate about sharing his love for dance with people everywhere, inspiring dancers to have fun, grow, and give their best.